OPINION¹

on Case C-161/17 (Land Nordrhein-Westfalen v Dirk Renckhoff)

ALAI has become aware of case C-161/17 in which a question has been referred to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling in the case of Land Nordrhein-Westfalen v Dirk Renckhoff and in which Advocate General Manuel Campos Sanchez-Bordona delivered his Opinion on 25 April 2018.

It notes that the facts of this case are liable to give rise to an interpretation not only of European Union law but also of several articles of the Berne Convention for the protection of literary and artistic works. It recalls in this respect that the Court of Justice has taken the position that “Community legislation must, so far as possible, be interpreted in a manner that is consistent with international law, in particular where its provisions are intended specifically to give effect to an international agreement concluded by the Community” (judgment of 7 December 2006, case C-306/05, SGAE v Rafael Hoteles, paragraph 35).

With regard to the Berne Convention, it has noted repeatedly, and particularly in the judgment of 26 April 2012, case C-510/10, DR, TV2 v NCB, paragraph 29, that “the European Union, although not a party to it, is nevertheless obliged, under Article 1(4) of the WIPO Copyright Treaty, to which it is a party, which forms part of its legal order and which Directive 2001/29 is intended to implement, to comply with Articles 1 to 21 of the Berne Convention (see, to that effect, Joined Cases C-403/08 and C-429/08, Football Association Premier League and Others [2011] ECR I-9083, paragraph 189 and the case-law cited). Consequently, the European Union is obliged to comply with, inter alia, Article 11*bis* of the Berne Convention (see, by analogy, judgment of 9 February 2012 in Case C-277/10, Luksan, paragraph 59)”.

ALAI wishes to contribute to the correct interpretation of the provisions of the Berne Convention which has always guided the principles of its action. That is why it would like to submit the following thoughts on Berne articles 11*bis*, 5(2) and 10(2).

I. Article 11*bis*(1) of the Berne Convention

The Berne Convention system, as recalled and confirmed in article 8 of the 1996 WIPO Copyright Treaty, distinguishes between:

- on the one hand, primary communication to the public by wireless² means, i.e. initiated by the communicator (11*bis*(1)(i)); and
- on the other hand, secondary communication to the public, i.e.:
 - one that further transmits another communication, either by wire or by wireless means, when it is made by another organization (11*bis*(1)(ii));
 - one that is carried out by loudspeaker outside the close circle of the family and friends of the person lawfully receiving the communication (11*bis*(1)(iii)).

In the case of Dirk Renckhoff, a primary communication is involved. Article 11*bis* cannot be interpreted to the effect that publication by someone on a website would confer ipso facto the status of secondary communications on all other subsequent communications made by other persons from another copy of the same work. There is a secondary communication only when there is a retransmission of a communication. In the case of Dirk Renckhoff, it was not the communication made by www.schwarztaufweiss that was retransmitted by Gesamtschule Waltrop. On the contrary, the school communicated the photo using a copy residing on its own site.

Since a primary communication is involved, it is article 11*bis*(1)(i) that applies. In this case, all that matters is to determine whether there is communication to the public; there is no other condition to be fulfilled. Therefore, the circumstances taken into account by the Advocate General are irrelevant, namely:

- The “incidental” nature of the work in relation to the student’s presentation (67);
- The absence of an intention to widen the circle of persons able to see the photograph (68);
- The fact that Mr Renckhoff had consented to communication on the travel magazine’s website (70);
- The question whether awareness of the need to obtain the photographer’s consent could be required of the student and her teacher (70); and
- The fact that the transmission’s intended public was not “new” or could not be characterized as forming a “wider circle” (95).

As it is sufficient for a communication to be to the “public” for article 11*bis*(1)(i) to apply, the Opinion is wrong to try and rely on the concept of a new public, thereby introducing in EU copyright law an additional condition which the Convention does not lay down, which reduces considerably the protection that the Convention seeks to provide and which contradicts its objectives of offering a uniform and secure basis for international copyright.

The introduction of the new public condition conflicts with the universal principle that copyright is a right effective erga omnes. It follows that, in the case under consideration, the authorization granted by Renckhoff to www.schwarztaufweiss to communicate his photo does not correspond to an authorization given to Gesamtschule Waltrop. Even if the public is the same in both cases, the Berne Convention system requires that a new and separate authorization be given by the author to the third party wishing to carry out an act of primary communication. An authorization given to one person is valid only in the relationship with that person, and not with third parties.

II. Article 5(2) of the Berne Convention

Can a professional person be required, when publishing a work on the Internet, to reserve his copyright, to mention his name as the author or to warn the public that use of the work is prohibited in order to avoid appearances to the contrary? This seems to be what the Advocate General is suggesting in his Opinion (paragraphs 75, 78, 82, 85 and 104 to 106).

ALAI considers it necessary, however, to respect the fundamental principle expressed in article 5(2) of the Berne Convention, which provides that the enjoyment and the exercise of the rights shall not be subject to any formality.

III. Article 10(2) of the Berne Convention

Under article 10(2) of the Berne Convention:

“It shall be a matter for legislation in the countries of the Union, and for special agreements existing or to be concluded between them, to permit the utilization, to the extent justified by the purpose, of literary or artistic works by way of illustration in publications, broadcasts or sound or visual recordings for teaching, provided such utilization is compatible with fair practice.”

Lawful use is thus confined to use by way of illustration for teaching. This criterion is adopted by Directive 2001/29 in its article 5(3)(a) and respected in the German law. In addition, both the Convention and the Directive expressly refer to national law; apart from that, the exception is optional.

From the viewpoint of the Convention, the crucial question is whether communication on a website that is accessible to all internet users and not restricted solely to the school community can still be characterized as use by way of illustration for teaching and whether such use is compatible with fair practice.

Communication of a work on a website open to everyone, even if it is made by a school, doubtless exceeds the scope of a broadcast by way of illustration for teaching. Therefore, article 10(2) cannot justify it.

In its preamble, the 1996 WIPO Copyright Treaty recognizes the need to introduce new international rules in order to provide adequate solutions to the questions raised by the development of digital technology and the Internet. In particular, the preamble to the WIPO Treaty recognizes the need to maintain a balance between the rights of authors and the larger public interest, particularly education, research and access to information, as reflected in the Berne Convention.

Yet the rule in Berne article 10(2) was not modified when the new treaty was adopted. The informed reaffirmation of the international consensus in this regard is thus recent.

On the other hand, communication on a school's website with more restricted access might prove, for its part, to be perfectly compatible with the Convention's norms. ALAI considers that the cited provisions adequately enable a solution to be achieved that ensures a balance between the fundamental right of authors and the right to education enshrined in article 14(1) of the Charter.
